

Madeline Fleisher is an associate in the environment practice of Hogan Lovells. Prior to joining Hogan, she was a trial attorney in the Environmental Defense Section of the Department of Justice, handling litigation in the federal district courts and courts of appeal under statutes including the Clean Air Act, Clean Water Act, Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act, and Toxic Substances Control Act. She is a 2007 graduate of Harvard Law School, and received a B.A. from Yale University in 2004.