

Aditi Prabhu is an Attorney-Adviser in the Office of General Counsel at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. She is the staff expert on administrative law issues that arise during rule development and program implementation. She frequently counsels and provides training to agency attorneys and program clients on legal issues surrounding meaningful notice, response to comments, interpretive rules, procedural rules, and guidance documents. In the Perez v. Mortgage Bankers litigation, she worked with the Department of Justice to incorporate EPA's views into the positions taken by the United States. Along with her Administrative Procedure Act expertise, Aditi has a media focus on water law. She also counsels on electronic reporting under the Clean Water Act and permitting for carbon sequestration projects under the Safe Drinking Water Act.

Aditi is an active member of the ABA Section of Administrative Law and Regulatory Practice and she regularly speaks and writes about rulemaking issues. Prior to joining the EPA, Aditi was an associate in the litigation practice of the law firm Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher in Washington, DC. She received an A.B. in Biology, summa cum laude, from Harvard College and a J.D. from Yale Law School.
