

Carrie Noteboom is Senior Counsel in the Environmental Law Division of the New York City Law Department, Office of the Corporation Counsel, where she works on a variety of issues, including environmental and land-use review of City projects and private development; solid and hazardous waste management; parks and natural resources preservation; and compliance with the Clean Water Act and Safe Drinking Water Act. A large part of Carrie's practice deals with litigation defense and regulatory compliance counseling for the City's wastewater treatment system, which treats an average of 1.2 billion gallons of wastewater per day and consists of 14 wastewater treatment plants.