

Dr. Patrícia G. Ferreira is a postdoctoral fellow with the Centre for International Governance Innovation's (CIGI's) International Law Research Program. She holds an S.J.D. in law and development from the University of Toronto, which she earned concurrently with an interdisciplinary doctorate in the dynamics of global change from the Munk School of Global Affairs. She also holds an LL.B. from the Federal University of Bahia and an LL.M. from the University of Notre Dame. At CIGI, she is researching the evolution of transnational regulatory initiatives to address climate change, including initiatives to reduce emissions from deforestation and to manage forests sustainably. A Brazilian national, Dr. Ferreira is a research associate at the Institute for Studies on Labor and Society in Rio de Janeiro. In 2013, she was a visiting scholar and Joaquim Nabuco chair in Brazilian studies at the Center for Latin American Studies at Stanford University and a visiting scholar at the Fundação Getúlio Vargas Law School in Sao Paulo. Before earning her doctoral degree, she worked for nearly 20 years in the fields of human rights and international development. Her professional experience ranges from litigating major Brazilian human rights cases before international bodies as a lawyer for the Center for Justice and International Law to grant making with the Open Society Initiative in southern Africa. Dr. Ferreira's research investigates why governments, nongovernmental organizations, and corporations are choosing some forms of transnational regulation over potential alternatives in their quest to promote both national and international sustainable development objectives.