

Adam Baas is Of Counsel with DLA Piper LLP (US). Adam concentrates his practice in the area of environmental litigation, regulatory compliance, legacy and successor liability, and transactions involving environmentally impacted assets. Adam has extensive experience in a range of environmental matters and acts as lead counsel representing corporate clients in complex litigation matters including regulatory enforcement actions, cost recovery actions, natural resource damage claims, product liability suits, toxic torts, alter ego claims, and parent/subsidiary successor liability actions. Adam has wide experience in advising clients on regulatory compliance with state and federal environmental laws and regulations; managing Superfund and legacy sites; assessing and managing environmental risk; negotiating consent orders and settlement agreements with state and federal regulators; the purchase and sale of contaminated properties; negotiating access and investigation agreements with regulatory agencies and private entities; and reviewing and advising on the environmental aspects of real estate and asset transactions. Adam's experience with emerging contaminants dates back almost 20 years. Adam currently advises local and multi-national entities in relation to legacy and present PFAS usage and the risk – if any – under the current regulatory scheme and future regulatory outlook. Adam has also led discussions on the state-of-the-law and science surrounding PFAS across the country and written multiple articles on the topic.
